A. Phillip Randolph and Pullman Porters

Taking the A Train

"As the role of the Pullman porter began to be diminished in the forties and the fifties, the culture and the racism of the south had not changed. And, as an example, some people who traveled the south were often so angered by it that they avoided it as much as they could—the rejection in the same hotel where you may have been the star in the front room [but] where you couldn't get anything to eat or a place to sleep. Duke Ellington, as an example, rented or purchased two [Pullman] cars for his orchestra. And when they would finish with their assignment they would return to this to sleep and to eat and to practice. They never felt that insult."—Timuel Black, historian

Behind the Scenes by program producer Lucy Kinsella

It's sad to see the personal stories from history die with the men and women who were present at the time of the events. Finding former Pullman porters who were alive when the union was created is difficult; they are a dying breed. We were very lucky to find Mr. Hodges who turned 99 on Valentine's Day. He was delighted to share his memories with us so that we could bring this story to you. You can hear more personal stories of former porters, who have passed away, at the A. Philip Randolph Pullman Porter Museum on Chicago's South Side.

One of the things I was shocked to learn was that Pullman porters were not paid for morning hours. If a porter worked a run from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m., he was only paid for the hours after noon. The porters were also required to arrive at their trains hours before departure time in order to prep the train with towels, linens, etc. The porters were not paid for these hours. On many occasions, they were required to start a new run immediately following the end of another, given no break in between and no time to see their families.

The Pullman Company was adept at pitting one race against another. The various jobs at the Pullman Company were usually filled by one race. When the porters decided to strike, the Pullman Company hired Filipinos as strike breakers. The Pullman Company was sending the message, "You can and will be replaced."

Lucy Kinsella has produced many documentaries for A&E and the History Channel, as well as independent projects as far away as Tanzania and as close to home as Chicago's inner city.
